Cross-overs and transdisciplinary work

- Complex societal issues can only be addressed through innovation
- Innovative solutions often require cross-sectoral collaboration
 - Collaboration across different sectors, disciplines and practices.
- Realizing, responding to and being able to deal with transdisciplinary ways of working is an important task.
- Learning to work in a cross-over environment and a transdisciplinary team requires a new way of learning, thinking and developing. Not just for students, but also for teachers and others

Challenges for education institutes

- What does this mean for education institutions?
 - In order to keep up with the current changes in the labor market, education must be responsive, flexible and agile
 - Education institutions must welcome changes to the way they are organized. From strategic, structural and operational levels to leadership, systems and staff.

What does it mean for you?

1. Working in a transdisciplinary way is often needed when tackling complex societal issues.
2. Build bridges between institutions, individuals and knowledge domains.
3. Establish a team spirit, realize trust and help enthuse others to collaborate effectively.
4. Work with various partners and positively contribute towards the solution.
5. Think and collaborate creatively with an investigative approach.
6. Adapt your management and leadership style to the needs of the transdisciplinary team and progress of the project.
7. Be open, curious and empathetic and take the initiative
8. Be prepared to be adaptable, resilient and unafraid to take action.
9. Reflect on and adapt your role and performance within the project, as well as those of the partners.
10. Everyone works together to solve complex societal issues.
